

About this Book

This book has been created from documents and personal memories about Servicemen who have lived in the village of Great Brickhill, Buckinghamshire. Edited by an Ex- Serviceman David Marlow, the book is published by St Mary's Church Great Brickhill and they will receive any proceeds from book sales.

This is a historical reference. It starts in about 1900 and the onset of World War One, progressing to World War Two and beyond. This became the Cold War period. Our soldiers, sailors and airmen have continued to support us in subsequent engagements and now number about fifty.

An interesting aspect of the more recent records, particularly those of Servicemen still with us, is to recount how their military life influenced what they did next.

The book outlines how the records were put together and how some personnel were interviewed. The stories have been validated and assembled into this work with the help of a small army of contributors.

The records though speak for themselves. It is a testament to those who have defended our shores in a selfless manner. It is our privilege to remember them and we hope this book goes some way to achieving that.
